CONRAD LOUNGE TABLE

Designed by Laura Lange

Audo introduces Conrad Lounge Table by Laura Lange, a design that explores the tension between structure and softness.

Formed in natural or dark-stained form-pressed oak veneer, the surface of the table is shaped into a continuous form, where the smooth material is held against a more defined structural outline. This contrast gives the table its character, especially where the raised solid wood edge meets the body of the table to create a contained surface with a tray-like function, allowing objects to remain in place.

The form draws inspiration from Japanese architecture, particularly the curved profiles of temple roofs used to balance visual weight and structure. Despite its openness in expression, the table remains grounded through its proportions and low stance. Adjustable feet ensure stability across uneven surfaces.

The design is intentionally transparent in its construction. Exposed screws mark the joints between components, reinforcing the honesty of the design and introducing a subtle visual reference, appearing as small eyes that peek out from within the surface — a detail that informed the name Conrad.

About the Designer

Designer Laura Lange holds a BA in Industrial Design from Design School Kolding and an MA in Furniture and Spatial Design from the Royal Danish Academy. Her practice is grounded in an understanding of how materials behave and how industrial processes shape the final object.

Interested in how objects relate to space and user, she often develops designs that sit between product and environment rather than functioning as isolated elements. Her work is defined by careful attention to proportion, assembly and the point where structure becomes clear in use.

For Audo, she has designed the Conrad Lounge Table, a low furniture piece that translates these principles into a restrained form where construction remains visible.
